

Eagleby Wetlands – Adventure Trail

The Eagleby Wetlands Reserve was rehabilitated by local people to preserve the natural environment and for the enjoyment of the community.

The rehabilitation of this area includes improved habitat for local wildlife, new community facilities such as bird hides, park furniture, an amphitheatre, sport and recreation facilities, and innovative recycled water initiatives.

The local Indigenous people, the Yugambeh, are the traditional custodians of the Eagleby Wetlands area.

The area still contains evidence of the past activity of the Yugambeh with scarred trees and stone tools on the ground.

The reserve has a number of wetlands representing various ecosystems. They include:

- shallow enclosed bodies of water and a river influenced by the tides, where mangroves thrive in the saline waters
- large areas of restored forest
- a woodland-like area with large old indigenous trees.

- Other facilities include:
- sporting fields and fitness stations along an exercise trail
 - a system of tracks as well as a boardwalk over a section of the wetland
 - stormwater ponds.

The wetlands provides an important habitat for waterbirds and reptiles, and is located adjacent to the Albert River. Featured in the wetlands are varied bird habitats such as melaleuca and brackish swamps, a freshwater lake, woodland, cane fields, and open grassland. More than 200 Australian native bird species have been recorded in the area, including 19 of the 24 Australian Raptors, and almost half of the bird species found in Queensland.

Explore the wetlands using the network of pathways and interpretive signs.
